According to Andy Yeatman, Senior Press Officer at the Met Office: "The recent snow in London was the first since December 2000, when a few cms fell in the suburbs, mainly the North and Northwest. None was reported in Central London. It was the heaviest fall in London since February 1991 when 20cms was recorded. We will still see some snow from time to time in London but as the trend to warmer, wetter, winters continues, snow will fall less often."
